Radiation therapy for joint diseases

For the quality of life of our patients

Radiation therapy for cancer:

We do everything we can to alleviate your disease – because we know the seriousness of a cancer diagnosis in the affected person. In an initial comprehensive meeting, we therefore clarify everything worth knowing about your diagnosis and upcoming therapy with you.

We support you – because apart from the use of the most sophisticated, state-of-the-art technology your disease demands a maximum of personal attention.

Even organisational issues – such as appointment management or therapeutic arrangements – should not become an extra burden for our patients. For this reason, we cooperate closely with our colleagues of other medical disciplines – because short, unbureaucratic paths avoid additional stress and thus support the success of our therapy.

Radiation therapy for inflammatory joint diseases:

Overloading and inappropriate straining often lead to changes in bones, tendons and joints, which in turn frequently cause painful limitations of mobility or even its loss. Generally, quality of life is affected when performing everyday tasks is associated with pain.

If medication or physical therapy does not lead to clear improvement, radiation therapy can be effective – particularly with chronic, inflammatory or degenerative diseases.

This special therapy has an anti-inflammatory effect that suppresses autoimmune processes and influences cell functions to achieve direct symptom relief. It is completely painless and has few side effects.
